As to the troops, they were encamped in the open country in barracks constructed with tin; wreck and waste wood of the Burrouding forests. The first consul selected the right and left of the Liane, on the two level spaces, the opening between which formed the basin of Boulogne, for the ground which the troops were to occupy. Thirty-six thousand men were here distributed in two camps; the one called that of the left, the other of the right. The troops that had been assembled at St. Omer, placed under the command of general Soult, were the occupants of these two positions. The other corps of the army were to be successively brought near the coast as their establishments should be prepared for them. The troops thus quartered found themselves in pure air, exposed, it was true, to violent and cold winds, but provided with a great abundance of wood to shelter and warm them. Immense stores of provisions were ordered from all parts of the country, and brought into the magazines. There came by the interior navigation, which was very perfect, in the north of France, as is well known, flour to convert into biscuits, rice, oats, salt meat, wine, and brandy. A great quantity of cheese, of a round form, was brought from Holland. These different aliments were to servo for the daily consumption of the camps, and for the provision stores of the double flotilla of war and transport. It is...
